Decorative and functional, mangrove root is a star element in aquariums. It provides hiding places for fish while adding a natural, aesthetic touch highly appreciated by aquarists. These roots release a harmless tannin favored by fish, which colors the water and enhances the natural look of the aquarium. This tannin can be reduced by boiling the root beforehand or through filtration. These roots can also be used in terrariums.

The Broussa Vine is a bushy natural decoration for aquariums and terrariums. It is particularly suited for arid landscapes.

Terrarium decoration is essential for its inhabitants. Indeed, the terrarium setup should best replicate your animal's natural biotope to ensure its well-being. The Mopavigne offers a natural decoration while allowing animals to hide or rest at height. It can also be used in aquariums where, through its appearance, it presents a compromise between mangrove root and mopani root.

Rare red vine – also known as spider wood – is one of the most popular roots in freshwater aquariums. It is indeed a favorite among aquascapers, who appreciate its natural, twisted appearance, resembling tree branches. Its branching structure and wood color blend gracefully with aquatic plants to create natural landscapes.
